a concentration of blood folate that is > high enough to help prevent neural tube defects. The amount of alcohol and/or folate of food and the time that is consumed before pregnancy are the most important factors to reach a concentration of blood folate that is > high enough to help prevent tube defects yes. All women, including those who have the MTHFR TT or CT genotype, can benefit from getting 400 micrograms of folic acid every day, especially before and during early pregnancy. Mthfr/Mthfr reductase b > an enzyme that plays a role in the way people process folate. A common variant of the enzyme MTHFR (also known as MTHFR TT or CT genotypes) determines how quickly certain people can process folate. Even if women with the process folate MTHFR TT or CT folate more slowly, they can increase their concentration of folate in the blood enough to help prevent neural tube defects by taking the recommended daily amount (400 micrograms) of folate [11]. Research studies have shown that in populations with high levels of MTHFR TT or CT genotype, getting 400 micrograms of folic acid daily before and during early pregnancy can reduce the risk of deficiencies in the neural tube up to > 85% [5, 11]. Many studies have shown that the consumption of folic acid increases the concentration of folate in the blood. For example, a research study has shown that after three months of 400 micrograms folic acid consumption, the concentrations of folate have increased by 250% among women with the MTHFR genotype TT [9].
